The clouds are so thick and it feels like it's been forty nights since I've seen the moon

My tiny boat's getting kicked pretty hard by the swell

I'm too cold to tremble but fear's pinned me down pretty well

Oh, Lord, through the rain

You come walking on water to tell me You love me again

My world is in flame and I tell you the truth when I say I'm feeling the heat

I want to run but the great rings of fire block my way to the street

I'm standing still and the sweat's pouring off of my face

I'm too hot to see that the chaos is being replaced

Oh, Lord, through the flame

The peace of Your spirit reminds me that You know my name

My moments are few as I stare down my sin at the foot of a cross

I know what I've done and my grief and regret let me know I am lost

And just as the hammer is raised to drive the nails in

My Lord takes my place, clears my debt and forgives all my sin

Oh, Lord, through your love

I am bound in Your service and washed crystal clear by your blood

I've locked myself in and there's no way the world's going to find where I hide

After the pain and the fire and the rain I am safe here inside

I get so confused just trying to know what to do

I fear the battles that I'll have to fight without You

Oh, Lord, through my walls

You come with Your scars and You ask me to answer Your call

Oh, Lord, by Your grace

You've gone before, conquered death and prepare me a place

My heart is on fire and I tell you the truth when I say I'm feeling the heat
